

(From the Front Page)

Pottawatomie county is having another county seat fight. Louisville wants to get it away from Westmoreland, and dispatches say it has a good show of doing so.

Frankfort Bee

(It will be cold or windy day, Bro Bowen, when Louisville gets the county seat away from here, for nothing short of a cyclone will ever take it there.)

The Pottawatomie county seat contest was decided Tuesday in favor of Westmoreland. The petition for relocation was found to lack sufficient names, several of the names on the paper having been forged. The contract has been let for a new stone court house to cost $10,000. Hulse & Moses, of this place, having the job.

Manhattan Republic

(Correct, Bro. Atwood)

We are loth to charge a community with so dastardly a trick as writing threatening letters to inoffensive women, but the authors of those letters to Mrs. M. Beal and Mrs. Judge Beal, should be known, and branded publicly with the infamy they so justly deserve. The town of Westmoreland and the people residing in the vicinity owe it to themselves to make the names of these wretches public.

If the people of Westmoreland and vicinity know the names of the villains they would take great pleasure in making them public. Judging however from the record made by the two towns in the last month, we should say they were probably written by some member or tool of Louisville forger's ring to detract public attention from their crime and to manufacture public sentiment against Westmoreland and secure names to their new county seat petition. The authors were certainly fools and Louisville appears to have the fool market cornered just now.